Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies

BULLETIN No. 8

TRAIL RIDES AND POW-WOW

The time for going to the Canadian Rockies is drawing near, and members are reminded that the last date on which any reservations can be accepted for the official trail rides with Pow-Wow in the Ptarmigan Valley is July 24th, and that the charges specified (namely $60.00 for the five-day ride and $35.00 for the three-day ride, with rebates for those who bring their own horses) must be paid by that date. Those who wish to join either party should advise the Secretary as soon as possible. The problem of supplying equipment and catering for so large a party at a distance from the railway is no light undertaking, and as the supply of saddle horses fit for such long distance rides is limited, the indications are that those who leave their reservations to the last minute may have to be left out. A description of the route is given in this bulletin.

Bill Potts, who proved so capable and popular a director-in-chief of horses last year, has been awarded the contract for the whole arrangements this year, including guides, horses, equipment and catering. He will be assisted by many of those who helped last year, with some additional guides also, as our expectations are of a still larger turn out.

INCIDENTAL INFORMATION

As many of our members anticipate spending a considerable time in the mountains, we are sending out with this bulletin various leaflets which have been supplied to us for this purpose, dealing with other outdoor attractions in that neighbourhood, such as the Calgary Stampede, A. O. Wheeler's Assiniboine tours, etc.

OUR NEW BOOKLET ON TRAIL RIDING

A Trail Rider's Guide to the Rocky Mountains, Yoho and Kootenay Parks, prepared and issued under the auspices of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies, has just been completed and a copy will be mailed in a few days to each member of the Order. This contains a vast amount of practical information which hitherto has not been readily accessible, and is illustrated with drawings, photographs and maps. Its production has involved much thought, time and money, and members will no doubt take good care of their copies. If they know of others likely to be interested, the Secretary would be glad to receive names and addresses.

JIM BREWSTER

OH, MR. BREWSTER!
(Tune—Oh, Mr. Porter)
Oh, Mr. Brewster!
Whatever shall I do?
I've gone and lost my pony
And I'm feeling pretty blue,
Fetch me out a new one
As quickly as you can,
Oh, Mr. Brewster!
What a silly girl I am!

THE OFFICIAL TRAIL RIDES AND POW-WOW Personalities and Description of the Routes

The territory through which the riders will travel by pack train on the annual ride this summer is patrolled by a game warden whose fifty years on this planet has been adventuresome to say the least. A Scotchman by birth but adopted by Western Canada as a lad of fifteen, James Christie has packed more adventure into his life than many fabled characters in highly fetched adventure stories.

While prospecting and trapping in the Yukon in the fall of 1909, James Christie fought a wounded grizzly at close quarters for a number of seconds until his two shots took effect. When the bear gasped its last breath, Christie lay in a pool of blood, his skull penetrated by one of the grizzly's teeth, scalp torn from the skull in three flaps, one eye almost torn from its socket, jaw broken, arm and hand fractured and a bad gash in his thigh. He was three hundred and fifty miles from Dawson City, the nearest hospital, and fifty miles from the nearest trading post. His partner took him to the lonely trading post, where he partially recovered, finally visiting the hospitals at Dawson City and Victoria, where the doctors did their best to restore his features, correct the twist in his lower jaw and straighten his arm.

At the beginning of the war Christie enlisted, winning fame overseas as a sniper. Enlisting as a private, he emerged, at the end, a lieutenant in the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry regiment, with the Distinguished Conduct Medal, Military Cross, and bronze leaf for a mention in despatches. Three wounds, one a severe head wound, further added to his sum total of physical suffering on this planet.

To-day he patrols the region of the park to be visited this summer by the Trail Riders, seldom visiting civilization, but living alone for the most part in summer and winter. He is looking forward to much company for at least five days this summer.

Then there is Bill Potts, keen-eyed hunter of mountain game, who has taken on the contract for the supply of horses, equipment and catering for the official rides this summer, a man-size job with at least 150 riders expected to participate. Twenty-six years ago, as a lad of fifteen, Bill entered the portals of the Rockies for the first time, as company and general purpose aid to a prospector. The trip was only a side issue to break the monotony of "cow-punching" on the prairies. But Bill formed a liking for the mountain trails. The prairies lost a "darn good cow-puncher" and the mountains gained one of its most famous hunters and trail guides.

Jim Brewster gave the young lad, who knew horses but not mountain trails, work as a pony boy. But very shortly he became one of the star guides.

In 1914, the tanned mountaineer answered the first flare of the bugle, but was taken prisoner in 1916, remaining in German and Russian prison camps for the duration of the war. After recuperating on his return, Bill Potts hung out his shingle as an independent guide in the Rockies, attracting many old friends and many new who made trips into the interior of the mountains for fish, game or just for sight-seeing and a rest.

Many world-famed persons sit and muse by the fireside to-day, harking back in their memory, as they thumb over old photographic albums, to the nights round the camp fire in the mountains when Bill's kindly face, lined and seared by sun, wind and rain, was the centre of an eager group, listening to many stirring tales of the trail or Indian legends accounting for many names in the mountains. Here are only a few of the famed guests of Bill on the trail at one time or another: The Rothschilds; Earl of Suffolk; Count Nesselrode, of one of the oldest ruling houses in Germany; William Rockefeller; the Bavarian Princes, Charles and George; the Vanderbilts; Countess Gezycka and countless others from every country of importance on the globe.

Bill Potts is only a few years younger than Jim Brewster, without a doubt the best-known dweller in the mountains. Although young in years, Jim Brewster is old in experience and in the number of friendships he has formed during his short but varied career.

Mere boys in the mountains in the early days assumed man-size jobs soon after climbing from the cradle. Jim Brewster drove cattle, hunted with the Indians and rode the mountain valleys in search of incorrigible ponies from his seventh birthday. When ten years of age, he conducted his first tourist party into the interior of the Rockies, with full responsibility as head guide. Blown by the winds of adventure to the four corners of the globe on big game hunts, he has always returned to the Rockies, which he knows like a book.

Years of hard work on the trail from the very beginning of the tourist business in the Rockies taught Jim Brewster how to cater to the wishes of the tourists. His business has expanded with the influx of tourists into the Rockies until to-day he controls an immense fleet of motor sight-seeing equipment. But he is still "the same old Jim," the man of the trail, the same congenial, ready-witted man of the mountains who has won a host of friends amongst the thousands who have visited the Rockies during the sixteen winters he spent in New York with the trail exhibit at the annual Sportsman's Show in Madison Gardens.

By his advice and practical assistance, Jim Brewster contributed largely to the success of last year's Trail Ride, and has been active in the preliminary work of organization for this year's Trail Ride, in which he hopes to take part.

Leaving Lake Louise on the morning of the first day of the five-day ride, the ponies follow the Bow River through a second growth of trees in burnt land through the valley of the river, between two rugged ranges of mountains. After lunching at an open spot nine miles up the valley, commanding a view of Lake Hector, the ride is resumed in the afternoon on the upper trail along the foot of Mount Hector, a magnificent peak, 11,135 feet in altitude, named after Sir James Hector, who pioneered in the Rockies sixty-five years ago in search of a pass through the mountains for the Canadian Pacific Railway. At the end of the trail through the heavy green timber, with occasional open stretches, lies the first camp at the junction of the river and Mosquito Creek.

The first cabin on Christie's game warden route is close by the camp site. Round the camp fire that evening, before and after the sing-song, the riders may have an opportunity to listen to the story of some of his adventures from his own lips. He seldom talks about himself in town, but the evening camp fire in the interior of the Rockies loosens many a silent tongue.

The Mosquito Creek camp is the headquarter camp for the second day, when the riders can choose one of the many alternative plans for spending the day. The majority will continue up the Bow River to Bow Lake at its head, with a view of Crowfoot Glacier near the lake. Continuing along the lake shore and following alpine meadow slopes brings the ponies to the summit of Bow Pass with its double panorama, Bow Valley to the south-east with the cluster of glacier-embellished peaks about Lake Louise on the Great Continental Divide blocking the end, twenty-eight miles away. The slopes of the divide fall away to the north into Mistaya, or Bear Creek Valley, carpeted with virgin pine and spruce, the glacier-encumbered ten-thousand-foot peaks rising to the clouds on either side. Turning, the riders will return to the headquarter camp in time for the evening meal.

Others may choose to rest in camp for the day. Anglers can ride a short distance to Hector Lake to fish for Cutthroat Trout and Dolly Varden.

On the third day, the route follows Mosquito in a north-easterly direction, keeping within sight of Dolomite peak and many small glaciers to the north. After lunching near the head of Mosquito Creek in view of Molar Glacier, the trail continues through thickly timbered country with goats visible on the mountain ridges and deer grazing on the lower flats. In following the gradual ascent to the top of Molar Pass, the timber gives way to open, alpine meadowland, affording an excellent view of Molar Mountain to the left, and Hector Glacier to the right appearing very near as it clings to the brow of a steep escarpment on Hector. Entrance to the pass is through a narrow gorge, leading out to a gradual, open slope bringing the ponies down to the level of the head waters of Molar Creek, which they follow through meadows and second growth to its junction with the Little Pipestone River, the camp site for the third night.

On the fourth morning, the trail follows the Little Pipestone to its head, leaving the river to climb to the summit between the Little Pipestone and the Red Deer Rivers, passing several small lakes enroute. The trail turns sharply to the right on the summit, following a small stream and then crossing another low divide to the head of Baker Creek, where the trail again turns at right angles. Skirting Baker and Ptarmigan Lakes in a region surrounded by many peaks in close formation, the ponies drop down through broken rock in following a rocky ridge to a small stream which they follow to the camp on a bench overlooking Corral Creek, arriving at about noon.

As the ponies leave the timber on the edge of this bench, the riders will see for the first time the main camp, built entirely of teepees, on a broad, level bench at the foot of Redoubt Mountain. Here the three parties, the long and short ride squadrons and the Jasper contingent, who have travelled through the Rockies from Jasper, will unite for an afternoon of sports, including packing competitions, amateur and professional, for the Trail Ride cup, horse races, Rocky Mountain tennis and other interesting contests. The riders themselves will have the opportunity of competing, not only the guides. In the evening, a grand sing-song, moccasin dance and pow-wow by the camp-fire concludes the program for the big day.

Lake Louise being only three hours distant, next morning will be devoted to resting, photographing, climbing, and getting acquainted, giving everyone an opportunity to meet the other riders and the interesting men of the mountains. All ride in together in the afternoon to the Chateau at Lake Louise, where the general meeting and election of officers after dinner precedes the farewells.

The three-day ride leaves Johnstone's Canyon at 8.30 on the morning of July 31, the Trail Riders motoring early to the canyon from Lake Louise or Banff. The trail during the morning follows the gradual ascent through Johnstone's Canyon, reaching the level of the open valley of Johnstone's Creek above the falls. Lunch camp is on this open valley about three miles from the opening of the canyon into the broad valley. Continuing up Johnstone's Creek in the afternoon to the mouth of Hiltz Creek, the first camp is reached. Members of the association on the ride are practically assured of seeing goat and sheep grazing near the camp in the early evening, with the possibility of a grizzly appearing at a discreet distance on the clean slides nearby.

Next day the cavalcade travels over an open pass along the slopes of an alpine meadow, with Mount Pulsatilla, 10,060 feet, directly to the left, dropping down the slope on the far side of the divide, past a beautiful lake, to the head waters of Baker Creek. Skirting the shores of Baker and Ptarmigan Lakes, and crossing the rocky pass to Corral Creek, the three-day squadron reaches the main camp shortly after noon in time for lunch, the afternoon sport fest and the evening sing-song, moccasin dance and pow-wow.

I'M RIDING THE ROOF OF THE WORLD

(Tune: I'm Sitting on Top of the World)

Don't want any Rolls Royce
Or Passenger Car;
A seat on a Pony
Is jollier far.
Don't want any Cushion—
A Saddle for Me—
And see me just push on
As gay as can be.

I'm riding the Roof of the World,
That's where I belong,
That's where I belong,
On Trails on the Top of the World,
Just trotting along
And singing a Song—
Won't you join the Chorus?
I just ride the Mountains
Until I'm ready to fall,
I just joined the Riders
With Button and all.
I'm riding the Roof of the World,
That's where I belong,
That's where I belong.

BE GLAD YOU CAME ALONG

(Tune: The Sidewalks of New York)

Riding, riding all around the lot,
You feel like Humpty-Dumpty, and you think you'd rather not:
Pull yourself together, sing a little song—
Soon you'll like the saddle and be glad you came along.

I CAN'T TELL WHY I RIDE YOU, BUT I DO

(Tune: I Can't Tell Why I Love You, But I Do)

I can't tell why I ride you, but I do-o-o.
There s lots of other ponies just as good as you,
But something in your eye
Says "You'd better not pass by."
I can't tell why I ride you, but I do-o-o.

Yoho Bungalow Camp

YOHO VALLEY

By Lt.-Col. PHIL. A. MOORE

For variety and sheer beauty the Yoho Valley is unsurpassed and has the additional attraction to the tourist of good accommodation and well-cut trails. The valley ride can be made in one day by those with limited time at their disposal, although two days or more may be spent here with advantage.

The Yoho is a valley fourteen miles long walled in by cliffs of limestone a mile high hung with primeval forests which extend up to the glacier line. A motor road runs from Field, eleven miles, to the Yoho Valley Camp situated close to and in full view of the Takakkaw Falls, which tumble in a glorious curtain of spray from the Ogden cliffs, seven times the height of Niagara, into the Yoho River.

From the camp the trail goes north up the valley and at the end of two miles a side trail of about two hundred yards cuts off to the left taking us to the Point Lace Falls—a tracery of liquid lace tossed carelessly over a pillow of rock sixty feet in height. Returning to the main trail, another side trail leads off one hundred yards to the right and takes up to the Angels' Stairs—a cascade falling out of the sky down winding and innumerable steps bordered by a blue-green forest.

After these two digressions we continue up the valley and a mile farther on pass Duchesnay

Lake, which a family of moose have pre-empted as a homestead.

Another mile and we swing around a corner and come dramatically on The Laughing Falls—a busy little fall of sixty feet rushing out of a cleft in the rock. Immediately we cross two streams by bridges and follow up Twin Falls Creek through a huge spruce forest, past rushing rapids until at about six miles from camp a trail to the right leads to the Yoho Glacier—part of the Wapatik Ice Field, which extends over an area of twenty-nine square miles. For those making the valley ride in one day it will be better not to take this side trip as, it adds four miles to the day's journey.

A mile farther on we emerge from the forest and come face to face with the Twin Falls, which thunder over a precipice five hundred feet in height. Facing the falls is the Twin Falls Rest House, where the night may be spent by those who wish to see the Yoho Glacier and the Little Yoho Valley. Others may have lunch at this spot.

Leaving the Rest House we immediately cross Twin Falls Creek—a rushing torrent which disappears down a canyon to our left—and a few minutes later pass Marpole Lake. Skirting this on the right, the trail rises gradually through deep forests and past rock slides from which we often hear the shrill clear whistle of a marmot.

Soon we arrive at Heather Lake—a small shallow tarn with a white bottom and heather-clad shores—and a mile farther on Lake Celeste appears, a most charming “figure-eight”-shaped lake whose narrows are guarded by tall spruces standing like sentinels on either shore.

Again rising as we continue, we come to a narrow dell bordered by a ledge of rock on the left. A short trail leads up this ridge (forty yards), and, mounting it, we look over the top of the wall at a breath-taking panorama—three-quarters of a circle of jagged peaks raising their snow-capped summits out of a sea of ice while far below is the Yoho like a silver ribbon winding on the floor of the valley. From left to right we see gigantic mountains: McArthur, Habel, Collie, Baker, Gordon, Balfour, Trolltinder, Ogden, Cathedral, Stephen and The Vice-President—guardians of the Valley.

We turn from this wonderful spot with an infinite regret, but the wonders have not as yet ended. On the other side of the dell, opposite the wall, we see a trail coming out of the trees. This is the way to the Little Yoho Valley—a most enchanting region—a veritable Alpland where the ice comes right down to the vegetation. Larches are scattered around in park-like groups and the open spaces covered with the pink false heather, like a rose-red robe.

Returning to the main trail and continuing, we shortly come to a “moraine” over a mile across—a vast slope of “talus” pushed down the mountain-side from the cliffs above by the glacier crowning Mount Vice-President.

After crossing the moraine the trail forks, the left-hand branch zigzagging directly down to the Yoho Valley Camp, while the right branch takes us a mile farther to Yoho Lake, where is the Summit Lake Rest House, and here we may have tea. Here the trail forks again, the right leading (four and a quarter miles) to Emerald Lake and the left to the Yoho Valley Camp (two and three-quarter miles) a thousand feet below, giant trees bordering our path as though illuminating the closing page of our diary of the Yoho Valley Ride.

SONG OF THE YOHO

(Tune—The Boatman (Fhir a Bhala) in “Songs of the North”; also in the “Scottish Students Song Book”)

1. The Falls are roaring down to the river,
The spray is drifting before the breeze,
My hands are upturned to greet the Giver
Who framed the mountains and forest trees.

Takakkaw and the foaming Yoho,
Takakkaw and the foaming Yoho,
Takakkaw and the foaming Yoho,
Where'er I roam I'll return to thee.

2. The Indian Paintbrush is now adorning
The grassy slides with its red device;
I turn my face to the kiss of morning
That comes so welcome from Paradise.

Takakkaw and the foaming Yoho—etc.

Summit Lake Cabin, Yoho Pass

SIR GEORGE SIMPSON

TRAIL RIDING EIGHTY YEARS AGO

One of the early white trail riders of the Canadian Rockies was Sir George Simpson, Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, who crossed the pass near Banff, now known as the Simpson Pass, in 1841, on his overland trip round the world—the first such trip ever made. He chose this route in order to avoid the Blackfeet, who were then inclined to discourage exploration. The following is an extract from an article on the subject by one of our members, Lawrence J. Burpee:

A rapid journey through swamp, forest, and rock-encumbered ground, and some hours' hard climbing, brought him to the summit of the pass. "We breakfasted," says Simpson, "on the level isthmus, which did not exceed fourteen paces in width, filling our kettles for this our lonely meal at once from the crystal sources of the Columbia and the Saskatchewan, while these feeders of two opposite oceans, murmuring over their beds of mossy stones as if to bid each other a long farewell, could hardly fail to attune our minds to the sublimity of the scene." The descent on the western side proved exceedingly trying. Twenty-three times Simpson and his men were compelled to ford the ever-winding mountain torrent whose valley they were following, and although the next day's march brought them to more level ground, it was only from one series of obstacles to another. The ground was now rugged and boggy; the forests were thick and tangled; and prostrate trees of large dimensions, piled and interlaced together, barricaded our track. Leading our horses, we forced our way along by winding about in every direction, by hewing or removing fallen trunks, and by making the animals, according to circumstances, leap, or scramble or crouch. At the end of four hours we had not accomplished more than two miles."

In the year 1900, Jim Brewster, who had read of Simpson's trip, went over the pass with Bill Potts, to see whether any trace could be found of this first passage. They discovered a tree, recently fallen, on which an inscription had been cut, photograph of which is reproduced on this page. In order to prevent further decay, a section of the tree was cut out and is now part of Jim Brewster's historical collection dealing with the early explorers.

The initials "G.S." of course stand for George Simpson. Below these are the initials "J.R." which were probably cut by James Rowand, the fur-trader and guide who supervised this historic trip across the Canadian Rockies. The whole trip of a thousand miles, much of it mountain travelling, from Edmonton to Colville, on the Columbia River, was made at an average rate of forty miles a day. The complete trip round the world was completed in nineteen months and twenty-six days, just three months of the time being spent on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Initials cut by Sir George Simpson and Guide on a tree in Simpson Pass, July 1900
